

Trump Ruthlessly Mocked in "Mirror-Image" of Wolff's "Fire and Fury"

Beleaguered US President Donald Trump has found himself the butt of a deliciously wicked parody with the release of Martha Skewermann's scorching "flip" of Michael Wolff's bestseller "Fire and Fury - Inside the Trump White House".

Skewermann's new release, titled "Dire and Puny - Outside Chump's Blackened House" follows the story of the seemingly virtuous but hapless Mayor Chump of Washintown who, through a series of highly improbable events, brings devastation upon his community after hiring a dubious brigade of Russian contractors to upgrade his city's infrastructure.

"Dire and Puny" is told from the viewpoint of seasoned investigative journalist Martha Skewermann, who - due to having overstepped Chump's personal boundaries - has been banished to a sidewalk encampment outside the mayor's house to pursue her reporting and research on the Chump administration. This situation itself establishes the book as a polar (and zany) contrast to Wolff's, in which the journalist was embedded within the White House, with intimate access to Trump and his staffers.

By similarly inverting almost every nuance of Wolff's bestselling novel, from title to rear cover and everything in between, Skewermann brings a much-needed element of hilarity to the tale of a dysfunctional administration careering out of control and bringing the rest of society down with it.

Inhabited by a host of quirky characters, including philanthropist Paula Moneyport, Turkish-delight-scoffing police chief Mickey Flout and Chump's oily car mechanic Mickey Crohney, "Dire and Puny" takes you on a delightful and liberating journey through the machinations of municipal politics.

Skewermann presents herself as a luminary in the field of "allegorical journalism". She foresees her book triggering a tectonic shift in the field of political reporting as we know it.

Yet great caution is recommended with Skewermann's sizzling account, as it may just cause you to spray out your coffee with laughter, at Donald Trump's expense of course. Send him your dry-cleaning bill, courtesy of Martha.

Martha Skewermann's "Dire and Puny - Outside Chump's Blackened House" is available on Amazon.